

Mateusz Idzik

DOI: 10.21858/msr.31.05

Vol. no: 31

Return to issue

Return to editions list

The process of absorbing brownfield sites by developers and other investors, without considering the history of the site, is a common problem. Such procedures make it impossible to identify the sites with the facilities that once existed and functioned there. The quintessence of the neighborhood, its manufacturing and industrial history, is being lost.

Mateusz Idzik, Element szczególny w otoczeniu - poszukiwania „śladów” i inspiracji w teoretycznym projekcie koncepcji przystanku metra „Wola Park” Pobierz